About Penn Township ......South Fairview

In the 1920s, the Gulf Oil Company installed a hand pump and tank in Brushtown, however, that only lasted one year since there were only three automobiles in the village at that time. The fourth store in the village was owned by Carey Black. He also installed a gas pump, and it was also not successful. The store closed in 1934. Keck's Store, at the corner of Rt. 233 and Pine Road, was started in 1947 by Luther Keck. The original township building was located on the southeast corner of the intersection, and the main road, Old State Road (Rt. 233) was gravel.

The first blacksmith shop was located on the west side of the Old State Road. The owner is unknown. The second shop was located on what is now Leeds Road (then Milltown Road), about 1/4 mile east of Old State Road. It was owned by Isaac Black. The third shop was on Peach Orchard Road, about 1/2 mile west of the Old State Road. It was owned by Carey Black, along with the general store. In 1933 he moved his shop to the Old State Road, about .2 mile north of Peach Orchard Road. After closing the business he grew strawberries and broom corn and had a small broom shop. The fourth blacksmith shop was owned by George Martin and located just to the north of Isaac Black's shop along a small stream. He was also a dealer in scrap metal and hauled log wood to the people in the village. This business was closed in 1947 and became the site of C. G. Laughman's Auto Salvage.

The Brushtown cemetery is located on the east side of Rt. 233 just south of the Pine Road intersection. The oldest known burial is Harry J. Decker who died April 15, 1873. It is now owned and maintained by the South Fairview First Church of God.

There was a school in Brushtown on the west side of Rt. 233, about 100 yards south of the cemetery. The school was built of mountain stone and had a bell and tower. In 1924 Penn Township consolidated several of the one-room schools into the Centerville School, and the Brushtown school closed.

In the county survey of 1872 there were only 36 houses in the village, twenty-two of which were log. Rev. Kuhn identified 8 of those houses that were still standing when he wrote his book in 1986. Six of them can be identified today. The Kuhn home (below, top center) is possibly the oldest existing home in the village, having been built in 1848-1849 by John B. Kelly. In 1918, Dr. Guy Carleton Lee of Carlisle purchased 89 acres just south of Peach Orchard Road and west of Old State Road. He decided to build a large summer home of native mountain stone and timber. The stone had to be quarried and hauled in, logs had to be cut and prepared for the building, and the excavating was done by hand with pick and shovel. Many of the men of the village worked on the construction of the home. Just inside the main gate another stone home was built for the chauffeur, and a separate frame home for the cook. This was the first house in the village to have indoor plumbing and flush toilets. Lee tried to drill for water, but was not successful. He then built a large reservoir on top of the hill behind the lodge and pumped water to the reservoir from the mountain stream at the bottom of the hill. When that failed, water was pumped from a large spring across the road at the South Fairview Rod and Gun Club.

Penn Township's depression economy received a welcome lift when A.F. Blessing bought the Lee home about 1934. Blessing was a highway guardrail contractor. Toward the end of the decade many of the young men, literally dozens, from area villages and farms worked on highway projects for Blessing in Pennsylvania and neighboring states.

Some older men were also taken on as foremen and machine operators. When he died in the late 1950s, the business was continued by his widow and his son, Bill, then sold. The Blessing home was at the edge of the mountain at South Fairview. It has been sold to the Methodist Church and is used as a Church Camp.

In the 1970s the Township Supervisors bought land which had been part of the Blessing property and erected a new municipal building.
